This school near Penn Station is refreshingly old-fashioned: It specializes in tried-and-true forms like ballroom, swing, lindy hop and several Latin styles. The studio's philosophy emphasizes the social aspects of dance, and instructors encourage learners to advance at a pace comfortable to them, making this a low-stakes place to meet new people—you could have the most romantic meet-cute ever during a waltz. BBC presenter Jen Bartram was upstaged by a boy dancing behind her. The hilarious moment a young boy stole the show by dancing behind a news anchor and has gone viral on social media. BBC presenter Jen Bartram was reporting from a windy beach in South Shields, UK, when she was upstaged by the boy and his impromptu jig. The hilarious video shows the boy, who has since been identified as Leo, wandering into the frame and taking full advantage of the camera pointed at him by breaking out into a jig. The video, shared by Ms Bartram on Twitter, shows him lifting his shirt and showing off some rib-tickling dance moves on the beach, right behind the news anchor who was completely unaware of his presence. "I was unaware of being upstaged by the young boy with some rather enviable dance moves during my forecast," Jen Bartram wrote on Twitter I was unaware of being upstaged by the young boy with some rather enviable dance moves during my forecast ????. pic.twitter.com/KpOMX001uj— Jen Bartram (@JenBartram) July 31, 2020She also shared the clip with music added to it, writing: "I've given this forecast what it deserved. Sound on." Watch the video below:I've given this forecast what it deserved. Sound on. pic.twitter.com/3hBCJLvjQo— Jen Bartram (@JenBartram) July 31, 2020Since being posted on the microblogging platform, the video has collected over 93,000 views and hundreds of amused comments."LOOOL this is so funny," wrote one person in the comments section."Nearly choked on my tea and toast laughing at this. So funny!" said another. This is not the first time that a child has stolen the show from a BBC presenter. Recently, a live interview on BBC News between Dr Clare Wenham and anchor Christian Fraser was hilariously derailed when Dr Wenham's daughter interrupted their discussion.Click for more trending news If you've spent a few minutes, or hours, or days, online, you've probably stumbled across references to Republic's "dancing reporter".If you live a life offline, let us quickly refresh your memory: Republic Bharat sent its anchor Shazia Nisar to Ukraine to report on the war. It's a humanitarian crisis but Shazia's reports have been...lacking in gravity.Thankfully, comedian José Covaco stepped up to give the people what they wanted – a rap song featuring Shazia.Some things are better watched than described, so also Read : Yup, that's Republic Bharat's idea of covering a war and an unprecedented humanitarian crisis JAMIE, PARAGO, ND asked:I can't dance. Help me before I hurt someone!Answer:First, learn a basic move so you don't have to concentrate on your own feet. Yuriy Datsyk, director of the Fred Astaire Midtown Dance Studio in New York City, recommends the box step: It's easy to learn, and it works whether you're dancing with a partner at a wedding or grooving solo at a club. Cue the music: Step forward with your left foot and then bring your right foot forward and to the right. Move your left foot next to the right. Now step back with your right foot, then back and to the left with your left foot. Bring your right next to the left. If you're making moves solo, let your body's natural movement dictate the swing of your arms. If you're dancing with someone, hold her with your right arm at her left shoulder blade level—this creates an intimate common space for the two of you. Join your left hand with her right hand at chest level. Now focus on your partner, not yourself. "Your job is to showcase her—you are her foil," says Datsyk. That also means protecting her from collisions.Watch Next Hip-hop has always rolled hand-in-hand with dance. In the early days, B-boys were the made men of the culture, windmilling, head spinning and jackhammering their way to local fame and endless levels of clout. Though breakdancing has waned over the years, dances associated with hip-hop music has persisted.These days it's hard to keep up with all the new moves—whips, woahs, nanas, dougies, millies, freddies and jessies or whatever new dances the kids are coming up with. Yes, this is mostly a young man/woman's sport. It doesn't appear everyone has gotten the memo."A lot of people out there are probably going. This is great, how he was moving and all that," Thorn said in an interview. "And other people are probably going. This guy, man, he's an awful dancer. The only reason why people even care is because he's a TV news anchor and he's just painfully White—if you will—at doing it. He just happens to be some guy that you wouldn't expect doing it." I'm not really a dancer."Recently, Charlotte, N.C. meteorologist Nick Kosir has found his own viral fame by participating in dance challenges live on-air. With more and more newsroom members busting out cringeworthy dance moves, XXL rounds up the most shameless, LOL-worthy instances. Meteorologist Nick Kosir wasn't expecting much of a reaction when he posted his first dancing video while working for a North Carolina FOX station in 2018. Now, Kosir is a Meteorologist with FOX Weather, a free app and service that allows everyone to track the weather from anywhere, and his dance moves are known nationwide.
