Photosynthesis occurs in chloroplasts, large organelles found mainly in leaf cells. Unlike the mitochondria, the chloroplast is composed of three membranes, not two. The innermost of these is the thylakoid membrane which is believed to be a single membrane folded into small flattened vesicles called thylakoids. They are arranged into stacks called grana. The space within the thylakoid membrane is called the lumen, and the space between the thylakoid and the inner membrane is called the stroma. The stroma is the site of carbohydrate synthesis.

Differences between Bacteria and Cyanobacteria

Bacteria

Cyanobacteria

Vegetative Cells

Heterocysts

Cyanobacteria

- Photosynthetic bacterium
  - Bluish-greenish color
  - Contain membranes that carry out the process of photosynthesis
  - Do not contain the same type of chloroplasts as plants do
  - This bluish-greenish algae can be found nearly everywhere on earth.
  - Can survive in extremely hot environments and even extremely cold
