Préparer une solution de concentration donnée par dilution

On souhaite préparer 100 mL d'une solution de concentration $c \approx 40/10$ à partir d'une solution mère de concentration c_0 .

masse soluté : m_1	masse soluté : m_2
Volume solution: V_1	Volume solution: V_2
Concentration massique : $C_{m,1}$	Concentration massique : $C_{m,2}$
$c_{m,1} = \frac{m_1}{V_1}$	$c_{m,2} = \frac{m_2}{V_2}$

What Does This Mean??

- If a solution has a 1/10 dilution the number represents 1 part of the patient sample added to 9 parts of diluent.
 - So the volumes used would be 10-1= 9.
 - This represents 1 part patient sample added to 9 parts of diluent.

Your doctor can ask for a laboratory test for you through Quest, or you can buy a test on the own account through a service called Questdirect. If this can be done I saw times, it may be what you meet: 1nd dilution = one / 2, 2nd dilution = one / 2 x one / 2 = 1/4, 3 ° diluiā = One / 4 x 1/2 = Å ¢ ¢>, 4th dilution = one / 8 x 1/2 = 1/16.5 Å pñ dilution = one / 16 x 1 / 2 - 1/32, 6th dilution = one / 32 x 1/2 = photo courtesy: Hinterhaus Productions / Getty Images Many of us do routine laboratory work once a year as part of our annual physical work . Each consecutive tube may be the number of the initial focused response. It is important to understand the concept of dilutions as there is a useful tool used in all areas of the clinical laboratory.
