

I'm not robot!

mark e smith of the fall

It may not have been packed out but the Fall's gig at the Junction proved eccentricity in music isn't dead, writes BECKY HARRIS.

Mark E Smith, the only constant in the bands entire 20 year history, introduced us to his latest line up - Neville Wilding, Adam Halal, Julia Nagle and Tom Head - whilst saying: "I get a bit fed up with the old one but I tormented them to death and they went away."

"I'm very happy with the new one though I find that even if you've produced a pile of rubbish people respect you, that's why I try and destroy it all every couple of years" Essentially then, Smith is The Fall, a group he began way back in 1980 after "I was stuck for ideas" and indeed need not only of musicians, but people who would contribute to the evolving group sound - past collaborators have included ex-wife Brix and Marc Riley (aka Lard).

It has worked enough to give them a solid following and a label as the fore-runners of the Indie scene though Smith has never shared by the lead singer.

"It's insulting. So is being called a Punk Band. We're autonomous, when we formed it was a deliberate reaction to the things going on at the time. Music has come full circle over the last 15 years that's why we're more popular now."

In fact The Fall have always incorporated elements of contemporary scenes into their own inimitable style, going so far as to make a dance beat orientated Album (97's acclaimed Levitate EP). Though their newest compilation, The Marshall Suite, sees a return to guitar laden eclecticism, Smith is characteristically evasive even when discussing the title.

"It refers to a three piece suite" he says. "No, really it's topical it's about generals coming back from war."

His bizarre interview technique perhaps stems from too many years spent around the music press, preoccupied with his so called drink problem, yet it has made Smith unusually candid.

"I live for booze," he laughs before admitting, "I've not given up but it's a report derived from lazy journalism. If you're a bit smart and serious people put it down to great publicity. People whose careers are going down the pan make out they've got a drug and alcohol problem, Liz Taylor's done it loads. I think its just a road to salvation."
